WEDNESDAY, APRIL 11, 1883.

DOMINION LANDS

No more important measure was down on the cards for consideration during the present session of the Dominion Parliament than that relating to the amendment and consolidation of the Dominion Lands Act. We cannot of course tell what has been done at this date. It may be somewhat late in the day, but it will do no harm to give an expression of our views on the matter. That there are many defects in the law as it stands at present cannot be gainsaid. Much misapprehension as to the proper interpretation of the Act also exists. What we want in regard to our lands is some law which may be readily understood. The Government is desirous of seeing the country rapidly settled, but if settlement is held around with so many cast-iron rules the object of free grants will be very largely defeated. The law should be more elastic in its character than it is. The residence clause is not only ambiguous in its character, but aggravating in its nature. A continuous residence of six months may mean a continued residence or it may not. A distinction certainly but with a great deal of difference as well. If the latter is meant, proof of the fulfillment of this part of the conditions would be less easy; if the former is meant, the hardship is at once apparent. Then there is the matter of homestead patents. The delays in issuing them have been the occasion of much vexation, annoyance and serious loss. One man may want to homestead for a second time, and another may desire to negotiate a loan on his land, but because of the delay in granting patents both are disappointed and suffer accordingly. The law says that a man must wait for three years before he can obtain his patent. Why he has to wait from four to five years is something that no one can understand. Then if he takes up land, even after surveys are made, he may not be able to make legal entry until long afterwards, either because the land office has not been established, or the land agent, if the office has been opened, has been instructed to refuse entries for a certain time. This is all wrong. The settler who takes up land and goes on improving it from year to year should be protected, and his improvements and cultivation count in place of residence. The Government invites squatters, and therefore it should respect squatters' rights. The rights of squatters should also be more properly defined. The Department of the Interior has come in for a fair share of abuse in the matter of lands in the North West, and not a few without a good deal of cause. If the machinery in connection therewith is not sufficient to keep matters in motion it ought to be augmented by Parliament so that the country might not languish through its dilatoriness. A greatly increased influx of immigrants to the North West is expected by all accounts this year. Every man and boy, so matter how poor he may be, should be enabled by honest industry to acquire an interest in the soil and be thus furnished with the sure means of bettering his condition, while at the same time his attachment to his new home would be secured. Towards this end it is clearly the duty of the Dominion Parliament to make provision, and it is certainly to be hoped that the opportunity for doing so at this session has not been lost. An amendment of the Act based on liberal spirit and with broader views will tend, we are convinced, to more prosperity and contentment than hitherto, while the murmurs of disappointed and dissatisfied settlers will be very much less frequent.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

Under the State Constitution of Ohio the granting of licenses is prohibited, and free run prevails. There has been a long drawn out contest in the Local Legislature over a proposed amendment of the Constitution. The contest was decided recently in rather a singular manner. Senator Miller, of Mercer County, appeared in the House suffering from delirium tremens. He threatened the life of the Speaker and several of his colleagues, and had to be removed by force. This scene made such an impression on his brother Legislators that, during the same day, they adopted a joint resolution removing from the Constitution the defects which, for thirty years, had prevented legislative regulation of the liquor traffic. Verily, example is more effective than precept. Temperance lecturers should not lose sight of this hint.

The United States Congress are making arrangements for an international convention to settle the lake of Great Britain, Germany and the United States, on matters relating to the movement of emigrants. As a preliminary step, a Commission is to be appointed to investigate all such questions as relate to the comfort and health of passengers whether coming to or going from the United States, and to formulate such provisions and regulations as they may deem essential, and report through the Secretary of Congress. Upon the report of this Commission being submitted, a copy of it is to be forwarded in the name of the President to the governments of the other countries named, with a request that each of them will appoint a Commission to examine the same, and in case the governments should approve of the provisions, to agree to sign their agreement. In case of their nonapproval arrangements are made for a joint Commission of the three countries. If the proposal is successfully carried out, it will no doubt be productive of good in securing the greater comfort and safety of emigrants.

We were pleased to see one of the butlers for Moore & Macdonald's new saw mill passing down to day. Also several sleds loaded with other machinery. It is rumored that the station of the Portage and Westbourne Railway is to be located on the property of Mr. John Macdonald, and that that gentleman has given half his lands to the Company.
